Kiglatuk's own "Christmas Carol" ... Von Miki101.Micha ... a very "exotic" setting and a very entertaining read! A really stunning short story which evolves in a most "exotic" setting: Ellesmere Island in the frozen high Arctic and featuring the most interesting new heroine in crime fiction: ex polar bear hunter Edie Kiglatuk. On Ellesmere Island the 21 December arrived, and the sun hadn't come up for two months and it would be another two before it would show its face again over the High Arctic horizon. Every year, during the Great Dark, people go missing without anyone caring much. Christmas is fast approaching on Ellesmere Island, in the vast frozen landscape of the High Arctic, and half Inuit ex polar bear hunter Edie Kiglatuk is dealing with the mystery about the circumstances of the violent death of Tommy Quataq. But things are seldom the way they seem in this godforsaken piece of land... And a Christmas Carol of a special kind will happen - and Rudy the Rednosed Reindeer will appear in a wholly new form! A fantastic FREE short story which contains also the first chapters of M. J. McGrath's newest novel - always featuring Edie Kiglatuk - The Boy in the Snow. This and also her first novel White Heat - I had to buy it right on the spot. And I can say - reading right now "The Boy in the Snow" that it is a very well written but very sad crime story hardly to lay down!

Also includes the opening chapters of M. J. McGrath's new book The Boy in the Snow. The shortest day of the year didn't count for much up on Ellesmere Island. By the time 21 December arrived, the sun hadn't come up for two months and it would be another two before it managed to scramble over the High Arctic horizon. Objects, animals and even people could disappear during the Great Dark without anyone much noticing. Which was why no one reported Tommy Quataq missing . . .
