Von Verena G. I'm glad I always get the extract of a story before I buy it... Learned that the hard way. I can't comment on the complete story, because I didn't dare buy it after I finished the extract. I'm not a native speaker, but even I can see the flaws in the text. Typos might be acceptable, but when the times start to switch from one sentence to the next, it is kind of hard to ignore. Starting the first pages in past and suddenly switching to present? Wait, did anybody proofread that? I also have some issues with the writing style, but that's subjective. I just don't like stories written in telegram style and in case of that story, there seems to be a lack of detail. Ok, they walk through the jungle, fine so far, one guy says "we have to walk for a few more days!" and BANG in the next sentence those days are over? They reached their destination? What happened in the meantime? Did they talk to each other? Did they just walk along in silence? Did they encounter any troubles, I mean it's still the jungle... Thirst, hunger, dangerous animals, toxic insects, maybe the heat? So, those little things and questions kept me from reading the rest. Maybe some improvements would help, because the concept sounded interesting, else I wouldn't have read the extract. Pity.
