resigned to her pending fate of a loveless marriage of convenience - "a business arrangement" - to her godparents' heir, Jasper. The reader notes there had been some trouble in her first marriage, although it started as a love match, at least on her part. Clarification is provided near the end. To Lord Ripley Connie is a delightful change from the airhead debutantes. But she has been spoken for and he leaves her godparents' houseparty with the express wish she write him. In London he hears her intended has been touting another woman as his fiancée and then Connie's maid shows up at his door reporting Connie missing from the stage inn after receiving a note from Jasper. Alex fears for Connie and employs his family connections to find her. Overall well-written and a do-not-put-down read.
