Sehr viel Text und trotzdem kann ich's nicht richtig wiedergebenVon BcherliebeDas ist mein zweites Buch von der Autorin. Ich fand die Geschichte, wie sie erzählt wurde, teilweise ziemlich anstrengend und schwer zu bewerten. So richtige Liebesgeföhle kamen bei mir irgendwie nicht an.Der Sultan heiratet die Tochter einer angeblich verfeindeten Familie um einem Bürgerkrieg vorzubeugen. Innerlich hat er seine junge Frau dafür, dass er sich gezwungen sieht, sie zu ehelichen. Die Braut dagegen fühlte sich von Anfang an zu ihm hingezogen, dass es ihr vor Lust die Sprache verschlug. Kurz nach der Hochzeit und noch vor der Hochzeitsnacht muss sie mitanhören, wie furchtbar, dumm, langweilig der Sultan seine Frau doch findet. Zuerst war sie verletzt, doch dann hat sie sich vorgenommen, ihre Ehe in Schwung zu bringen. Angeblich hatte sie Jura studiert, doch so richtig clever kam sie nicht rüber, eher ziemlich weichlich.Die Ausgangslage klingt jetzt vielleicht spannend, aber dieses langwierige Hin und Her empfand ich doch ziemlich anstrengend. Man liest es und fragt sich hinterher, was das Ganze eigentlich soll? Ich bin froh, dass das Buch fertig ist. Dieser Sultan hätte mir gestohlen bleiben können.Einen Extrapunkt gebe ich, weil die Schwester doch noch ihren gewaltttigen Mann verlassen hat!

KurzbeschreibungIn marrying the esteemed Sultan Aki Katabi, Eleanor had brought her exiled father back to his beloved home country of Talina. But more than that, she'd tied herself for life to a man who was dangerously attractive and overpoweringly appealing. That she wanted him was obvious, but any hopes she held that her desire would be returned were smashed by an overheard conversation on her wedding night. He hated her, and her family, and had married her only to remove the threat of civil uprising from his life. Well, if he thought she'd come willingly to his bed when he felt like that, he had another thing coming!Aki is robbed of the chance to choose his own bride by the necessity of making a strategic match. His wife is completely foreign to Talina culture, and he resents her presence. But gradually, he begins to realise there is more to her than a much despised bloodline. He's not sure he can overcome his hatred for her father, but slowly, he finds his feelings for her changing. Desiring his wife is not something he's prepared to do, but some things can't be controlled...KurzbeschreibungIn marrying the esteemed Sultan Aki Katabi, Eleanor had brought her exiled father back to his beloved home country of Talina.
