mix of paranormal, funny, and heartbreaking stories Von Hoener, Birgit Five authors, five paranormal short stories in one book which will keep a reader glued to the pages for several hours - definitely a recommendation for me, as none of the stories were badly written or boring. J.D. Robb, Chaos in Death: Eve and Roarke at their best, chasing a murderer around New York. It's always amazing how much tension and story, and how much of the dynamics between the now well known main characters, the author can pack into a short story. Mary Blaynes, Her Greatest Treasure: The Indian coin is back, this time as the valued treasure of a young widowed shopkeeper, whose dead husband comes to her in a dream with one word: "wish". Together with a young mysterious rogue she tries to solve the mystery. A charming and quite amusing story, with quirky characters and a humorous narration style. Patricia Gaffney, Dear One: Grandson tries to save his Grandfather from the clutches of a telephone psychic. Highly amusing, reminding me of some of the old slapstick comedies in a way, lots of mixups with very likeable characters and a great storyline. Ruth Ryan Langan, The Unforgiven: Young widow inherits an old castle in Scotland - together with one of her husband's long dead and very angry ancestors. Can they both help each other to find peace? Again, very amusing, but heart-breaking as well as the story develops. A mix between making the reader laugh and tear up. A lovely story. Mary Kay McComas, His Brother's Keeper: A young dead man wants to pass a message on to his grieving elder brother and uses dreams and a pretty author. Again, very likeable characters, funny dialogues and great narration style, and heartbreaking passages. All in all, a highly entertaining treasure of five short stories which I found difficult to put down until I had read the last word. Loved it.

Eine der schwächeren Geschichten Von Skippy Ich bin seit Jahren ein großer Fan der Eve Dallas und Roarke Reihe, erwarte jedes neue Buch mit großer Vorfreude. Dieses Mal handelt es sich nur um eine Kurzgeschichte. Die Storyline ist interessant, die Dialoge gewohnt bissig und humorvoll, aber meiner Meinung nach endet das Buch zu abrupt. Ich möchte nicht zuviel verraten, aber ich hatte am Ende noch jede Menge Fragen bezüglich des Mörders. Schade eigentlich, der Fall ist klasse, aber ein paar Seiten mehr um den Mörder zu befragen und alle Fragen zu beantworten wäre schön gewesen.

Kurzbeschreibung Settle in for five startling tales of uncanny suspense and disquieting romance including an In Death story featuring Lieutenant Eve Dallas from #1 New York Times bestselling author J. D. Robb. Eve and Rourke return to investigate the murders of a series of luckless indigents and the strange connection to a brilliant young surgeon in J. D. Robb's "Chaos in Death." In Mary Blayney's "Her Greatest Pleasure," a shopkeeper's solitude is complicated by a magic coin, a daring rogue, and dreams of her late husband, who whispers but one word...wish. A lonely woman and a hotline psychic turn their astonishing connection to the other side into an unexpected romance in Patricia Gaffney's "Dear One." The shattered soul of an angry spirit imprisoned in a Scottish manor house could be a young widow's only salvation in Ruth Ryan Langan's "The Unforgiven." And in Mary Kay McComas's "His Brother's Keeper," a young ghost eases his brother's pain and guilt by inviting him into the dreams of an imaginative author of children's books.
